The course is addressed to students in Architecture and Civil Engineering for a training in a Rehabilitation for Cultural Heritage environment and complex case-studies, which need to be faced within a multi-disciplinary and collaborative approach between Engineering and Architecture. It is conceived as an interdisciplinary Design Workshop which faces structural, architectural and urban issues applied to relevant case-studies by Pier Luigi Nervi: the Port Authority Bus Terminal in New York, as "American case study", and the Corso Francia Viaduct, as an "Italian case study", together with other Italian Nervi realisations in Italy. Specific seminars, lectures, and site visits within the city of New York, Rome and some other locations in Italy will provide guidelines and a collection of case studies to observe and discuss in order to acquire expertise and reference material for the development of the design project. Students will also visit professional offices in New York, where it will be possible to directly observe design project works in progress. The final exam will consist of the presentation and discussion of the final project in a panel session.
